If all employees refuse, the supervisor has the right to order the required number of employees to work the overtime, starting with least senior man in the grade required. It is the understanding of the parties hereto that an attempt is being made to provide all employees with an equal amount of overtime so that one employee will not have more overtime than another employee. In the event therefore, that the employee with the most seniority and grade has previously worked overtime, and additional overtime is required, the overtime shall be offered to the man with the next most seniority in grade rather than to the man with the most seniority in grade in order that the other employees have an opportunity to work the same amount of overtime so the employees with the most seniority and grade. JY*
